

AN INTERDISCIPLINARY MINOR STUDIES IN HUMAN AND FAMILY DEVELOPMENT

<http://www.umt.edu/hfd>

The Human and Family Development minor is an interdisciplinary minor concerned with the study of life-span human development and family relations, and the impact of biological, environmental, and socio-cultural factors on both. The HFD minor encompasses a broad range of areas: Early Intervention, Gerontology, Early Childhood, Normal Development, Family Development, and Exceptional Development. The minor is designed to supplement the knowledge base of students by providing a human and family development specialty orientation to their fields of major interest. Students with career goals that include communications, psychology, education, social work, sociology, anthropology, pre-medical sciences, nursing, and physical therapy will benefit from the specialty orientation in human and family development. Students with other career goals also will find the program rewarding; a business major interested in family service administration or consumer economics; a radio-television major interested in children's programming; a forestry major interested in recreational management appropriate for a particular population.

The University of Montana

HUMAN AND FAMILY DEVELOPMENT MINOR

The Human and Family Development minor is an interdisciplinary program of study, encompassing a broad range of ages and areas including:

- Early Intervention
- Early Child Development
- School-Age Development
- Adolescence
- Gerontology
- Family Processes

The HFD minor emphasizes the view that:

- Human growth is a valid subject of scientific study; and
- Knowledge of the processes and contents of psychological, social and biological growth of the individual separately and within the family context will benefit the quality of life of both the student/investigator and the public.

The purpose of this program is to equip students with a general knowledge of issues relevant to normal and abnormal patterns of human and family development and to provide them with some practical skills and insights which will enhance their abilities in a variety of professions which deal with developmental and family issues. The program also supports students to develop practical skills and insights that will enhance their abilities in a variety of professions dealing with issues of human and family development. The curriculum is interdisciplinary and reflects four specific goals:

- (1) Provide students with an extensive knowledge base of theory and research concerning lifespan development and the role of the family in development;
- (2) Train students to be critical consumers of research and evaluation results in the human and family development areas;
- (3) Provide students with practical experience in at least one applied service discipline in the human and family development areas; and
- (4) Provide students with the opportunity to take topical courses in normal and atypical development of the individual and family.

ENROLLING IN THE MINOR

All students seeking a HFD minor must formally enroll in the minor and select and meet with faculty advisor from the Human and Family Development Minor Committee (see list). You will need to:

- 1) Complete the attached form entitled HFD Minor Plan of Study Form in consultation with your HFD advisor and submit it to HFD Co-Chair Meg Traci; and
- 2) Submit a completed Degree/Major/Option Change Form (obtained at Griz Central in the UM Lommasson Center), signed by one of the HFD co-chairs, to the Registration Counter in Griz Central.

Students desiring more information should contact Paul Silverman (243-6349), Meg Traci (243-4956) or one of the Human and Family Development Minor Committee members. Information is available at the HFD course catalog website: <http://www.umt.edu/catalog/cat/cas/humdev.html>

Kassie Gahagan, HFD Minor

The Human and Family Development minor has a unique blend of coursework and practicum options that make it the perfect fit for me. I am a Psychology major at the UM and am able to use this minor's diverse coursework to dabble in other interesting classes which I would have otherwise neglected. The practicum has helped me to gain valuable real-life experience that have already proved applicable. My experience working with children in the practicum led to to gain a job as a summer camp counselor. I am pleased with the opportunities the HFD minor has already given me and can't wait to see where else it takes me.

PROGRAM OF STUDY

To earn a Human and Family Development (HFD) minor, students must complete 24 credits, with 11 of those credits at the 300 level or above. All students are required to take a 12-credit core curriculum (including a 2 credit service learning placement) and, with the help of a faculty advisor, to develop a written statement of goals and interests along with a planned curriculum that includes 12 additional credits of electives consistent with the stated goals and interests (HFD Minor Plan of Study). The 12 credits of electives must be a planned curriculum consistent with the student's stated goals and interests. At least 6 credits of electives must be outside of the student's major.

CAREERS

While a Human and Family Development minor is likely to benefit any undergraduate and graduate student interested in a particular age-group or aspect of human development.

Academic majors that directly lend themselves to this orientation include:

- Psychology
- Education
- Social work
- Communications
- Sociology
- Anthropology
- Pre-medical sciences
- Nursing
- Physical therapy

Heather Laroque, HFD Minor

Although I have only just begun my college journey, the Human and Family Development program has already widened my opportunities as a UM student. As a Psychology major, I plan to go on and pursue my masters in Occupational Therapy. The Human and Family development minor has given me opportunities I can look forward to as continue on with my undergraduate study.

The program is not designed to equip students with the technical skills or knowledge needed in any particular profession. Rather, it is designed to supplement the knowledge base of students by providing a human and family development specialty orientation to their fields of major interest. A variety of professions involve an academic background in human and family development:

- Child care
- Early Intervention
- Family services
- Mental health services
- Nursing
- Social work
- Developmental disabilities and early childhood services
- Elementary and secondary education
- Gerontology

Indeed, most students with degrees in human and family development pursue careers in counseling or psychological services, early intervention, teaching, and social work. Students with other career goals also may find the program rewarding: for example, a business major interested in consumer economics or family service administration; a radio-television major interested in children's programming; a forestry major interested in recreational management appropriate to a particular age group.

HUMAN AND FAMILY DEVELOPMENT MINOR SERVICE LEARNING

Below is a list of potential placement sites for students enrolled in the Human and Family Development Minor service learning experience, Cooperative Education Experience (HFD 498). This is considered a service learning experience in which you set and achieve learning goals in addition to providing service. In addition to sites listed, students may propose other sites for approval to the service learning faculty supervisor. For example, there are many retirement homes and centers, as well as day care and preschool sites which are not listed but which may be considered appropriate. Contact your Human and Family Development Minor Committee Advisor for more information.

While the Human and Family Development Minor requires only 2 credits of service learning work (roughly equivalent to 90 hours of work over a 15-week semester), note that many sites, indicated by an asterisk (*), require longer commitments, up to two semesters.

The procedure for enrolling in HFD 498 is as follows:

- (1) Identify a position that you are interested in.
- (2) Contact an HFD Committee faculty member who you would like to have serve as an academic supervisor.
- (3) Contact the agency that offers the position and determine whether you may volunteer there.
- (4) Go to Internship Services (Lommasson Center 154), get a Learning Agreement form, complete it and get the signatures of your academic supervisor and your agency supervisor, and return the form to the Internship Services. You will also need to have your academic supervisor sign a course over-ride slip (obtained at the Registrar's office, and returned there) in order to officially register.

Details of supervision are to be worked out between the faculty supervisor and the student, although it is assumed that there will be an on-site supervisor and that the student will meet periodically with the faculty supervisor to report progress and to discuss relevant issues. Students will be responsible for:

- 1) participating in a 1-hour weekly seminar in which your service learning goals are developed, you participate in discussions and classroom exercises with other service learning students, and you attend workshops and talks relevant to your service learning activity.
- 2) keeping a weekly log of their hours (signed by the site supervisor);
- 3) writing a weekly reflection journal of relevant learnings during the service learning placement; and
- 4) writing a comprehensive 10-page literature review on a topic that will be determined with the faculty advisor assigned to the service learning placement, using APA Style.

Rebecca Hamler, HFD Minor

I worked for nine weeks at Clark Fork School as summer camp counselor. This was one of the best educational opportunities I have had as a college student. I gained hands on experience working with five to fourteen children ranging from three to seven years of age. Weekly field trips to art museums, rivers, parks, theatres, and hiking the "M" prepared me for just about anything! I enjoyed meeting the incredible staff, parents, and students at Clark Fork and gained a new appreciation for the outdoors in beautiful Missoula MT. This internship helped me accomplish my goals while earning credit, and provided me with some very entertaining stories. I would recommend being a part of this internship process through the HFD department because it is wildly diverse. The possibilities are endless!
